Absolutely Pure Milk

UNRELIABLE MILK IS DANGEROUS

We have devoted years to the selection and handling of Milk, and we know that our sources of supply are unequalled for Cleanliness and Purity.

Our Milk is Sweet and Fresh when we serve it.

It will be Sweet and Fresh when you use it, if it is not allowed to stand two or three hours in the hot sun. Place the bottle at once in a refrigerator or in ice water. The latter is even better than the refrigerator.

Milk is the best food in hot weather. It is digestible and strengthening.

CATHOLIC CHURCH NOTES.

At the 7 o'clock mass Sunday at St. Aloysius' Church, the Men's Third Sunday Brigade will receive holy communion. More than 1,600 men attend this service.

A lawn party for the benefit of St. Theresa's new school building will be held July 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22, on the school grounds, V street, between Fourteenth and Fifteenth streets, Anacostia.

Rev. Dr. George Sauvage, professor of dogma at Holy Cross College, Catholic University, when about to start on his vacation last week was taken suddenly ill with typhoid fever, and removed to Providence Hospital.

Monday the Immaculate Conception parish will turn out for its annual excursion to River View. The programme of the day includes baseball, races, and other athletic sports for the children.

Owing to ill health, Father James Guille, C. S. P., has been compelled to resign as superior of the College of St. Thomas Aquinas, the Paulist House of Studies, at the Catholic University. During the winter he was away from the college a great portion of the time, suffering from a serious affection of the throat. His successor has not yet been announced.

Rev. Philo Laos Mills, who was ordained to the priesthood last month by Cardinal Gibbons at the cathedral in Baltimore, has returned from his vacation and has already assumed his new duties as assistant pastor of the Church of the Holy Comforter in this city.

CHAPTER XI.

Next morning, by daylight, the whole region was aroused. Count Delorme had been found dead, robbed and murdered, in the park of the Chateau Bernard. The police appeared in swarms. No one had seen him at the chateau, and old Mme. Bernard had fainted when told of the murdered man being found in the park, and had taken to her bed very ill, so she could not be disturbed. Delorme's identity was easily established, and it was surmised that he was on his way to the chateau when he had met his fate. Toni listened, with a blanched face, to all the excited talk and colloquy that went on among the villagers as well as the circus people about the strange murder. Suspicion at once fell on the circus people, but Pierre and Nicholas were old hand at the business and knew how to manage such little affairs. They had promptly proceeded, the first thing next morning, to try for an advance of money from the manager of the circus, and being refused, they had tried to borrow money from several of their fellow-employees to disguise the fact that their pockets were well-lined at that very moment with Delorme's money. Toni had never thought of this subterfuge, and did not attempt to borrow a franc. He spent the day in one long spasm of terror, and in the evening, when the performance was over and he was going back to his lodging, his two friends joined him.

"Toni," said Nicholas, with a laughing devil in his eye as he spoke, "you must be very careful, for suspicion might fall on you for the part you took in our little escapade. You struck the blow, you know."

Toni stopped, stared, and threw his arms up above his head in a wild passion of despair.

"I did not—I did not—I did not," he cried.

Then Nicholas, slipping his hand in Toni's pocket, drew out a twenty-franc gold piece, a coin which Toni had seldom in his life owned.

"This was what you took out of the man's pocket," said Pierre. It was too much for Toni. They were walking along the highway toward the village, in the soft May evening. Toni quite unsteady on his legs, sat down by the roadside. He was so stunned and dazed that he could neither move nor think nor speak. Pierre and Nicholas walked off laughing, Pierre, meanwhile, having put the twenty-franc piece in Toni's pocket. When Toni felt this, he looked gloomily at Paul as he came up and ran his eye casually over the recruits.

"Pretty bad lot, eh, sergeant?" said Paul.

"Dreadful, sir. It would have broken your heart to have seen them in the riding school yesterday. Not one of them has any more notion of riding than a babe of hay has."

"Ah! Well, you can look them into shape, if anybody can," was Paul's reply to this pessimistic remark.

The specially trained horse on which greenhorns learned was then brought in. He was an intelligent old charger, and when he stood stock-still, with a trooper holding up his forefoot, his small, bright eye traveled over the recruits. Then suddenly dropping his head, he gave forth a long, low whinny of disgust, which was almost human in its significance.

"Old Caporal even laughs at them!" cried the sergeant. "Now, come here, you handy-legged son of a sailor, and get on that horse's back, and do it with a single spring."

This was addressed to Toni, who lurched forward so clumsily that it was seen there was little hope for him.

TO BE CONTINUED TO-MORROW.

teau Bernard that, one morning Sergt. Duval, the father of Denise, heaved a heavy sigh as he paced the tankard in the riding school at Beaupre and mournfully surveyed the group of recruits who were to take their first lesson in voltige or circus riding. There were about fifty of them. They all came from Paris, and recruits from Paris are notoriously hard to break in. They feel a profound contempt for "rural" a term which they apply to everybody outside of Paris. The sergeant, running his eye over them, had no difficulty in sorting them out, so to speak, according to their different degrees of incapacity. About half were clerks, waiters, and artisans' apprentices, town-bred and certain never to get over their fear and respect for horses. The other half were porters and laborers and the like, who could be taught to stick on a horse's back, but would never acquire any style in riding.

Among them was a stupid-looking young fellow, rather short, but well made, with very black eyes and a closely cropped black poll, whom Sergt. Duval did not recognize in the least as his old friend Toni, the unknown aspirant for the hand of Denise. Toni's apparent fear and dread in the company of the horses had kept the troopers in a roar of laughter ever since he had joined. His awkwardness in the simple riding lesson of the day before showed what a hand he would make of it in the more difficult voltige, and his companions had hustled him to the first place in line so they could see the fun.

Just then Sublieutenant Verney walked into the riding hall. He was the same Paul Verney, only he was twenty-two years old, and by every horse in the regiment. This triumph was something to be laid at the feet of Lucie Bernard, whom he had loved ever since that August afternoon in the park at Bienville, when she had taken his book away from him and his heart went with the book. Sublieutenant Verney was always present at the riding drill, whether it was his turn or not, and he dreamed dreams in which he saw himself as another Mucron or Kellerman, leading vast masses of heavy cavalry to overwhelm infantry, for he held to the French idea that men on horses can ride over men on foot. His dog Powder, a smart little fox terrier, was at his heels.

Now, Paul Verney was an especial favorite with Sergt. Duval, who had known him as boy and man, who had seen sublieutenant come and go, and knew the breed well. He looked gloomily at Paul as he came up and ran his eye casually over the recruits.

"Pretty bad lot, eh, sergeant?" said Paul.

"Dreadful, sir. It would have broken your heart to have seen them in the riding school yesterday. Not one of them has any more notion of riding than a babe of hay has."

"Ah! Well, you can look them into shape, if anybody can," was Paul's reply to this pessimistic remark.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

Dr. S. H. Woodrow, of the First Congregational Church, will address the Christian Endeavor Assembly at Pen-Mar next Tuesday evening on "Fellowship." The general theme of the assembly, which opens on Monday, at 7:30 p. m., and holds its concluding session on Friday at the same hour, is "Service."

President Glavin announced this week that the next meeting of the Christian Endeavor Union will be held August 1, at Forest Glen, Md. Special cars will carry the party from the city, starting at 5 o'clock. A picnic supper will be eaten on the grounds and the evening meeting will be held indoors.

The C. E. Society of the United Presbyterian Church was admitted to the union at this week's meeting. The "Flying Wedge" of the union will visit the society to-morrow evening at 7 o'clock at Georgia and New Hampshire avenues.

The two Christian Endeavor Societies of the Rhode Island Avenue M. P. Church held a combined service on the church lawn last Sunday evening, led by the pastor, Dr. Benson.

The C. E. installation service was held at the Fifteenth Street Christian Church Sunday evening. The twelfth chapter of Hebrews was read by the retiring secretary. The pastor addressed the officers.

The Young People's Missionary Conference, at Silver Bay, N. Y., July 21 to 23, will be attended by Miss Lydia Moser and Bruce Cleveland.

Endeavorers of the society of the Vermont Avenue Christian Church met Tuesday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Williams.

The C. E. meeting and the evening church service at Mount Tabor M. P. Church are being consolidated into one evening service.

The trolley party of the Ninth Street Christian Society Wednesday evening was a success, the refreshments which awaited the crowd at the end of the ride being much appreciated.

MORNING CHIT-CHAT.

"How happy could I be with either
Were t'other dear charmer away."

DON'T you remember that quotation beneath the old-time picture of a bashful swain in an ecstasy of indecision between two pretty girls?

I harked back to it in mind the other day when I found a letter in my mail from a girl in a similar quandary.

"I am in great perplexity and I wish you'd give me some good advice," it ran. "There are two men in love with me, and I care equally for both of them. They both have many good points that I like, and I simply cannot seem to decide between them, and yet I must. What shall I do?"

Of course, I can't attempt to answer a letter like that in a specific way without knowing the men and the conditions.

Nor, even if I did know them, for that matter. I'm not quite that inane.

But for the sake of this young person and of any other young persons who may happen to be in a similar quandary, I want to tell a little story along that line that came to me the other day and quote a little poem of which I am very fond.

This is the story. My neighbor told it to me. She said: "When I was a young girl I had a girl friend who was being courted a good deal by two young men that she seemed to like about equally. First it would be one and then the other till the neighborhood was on edge about it. Finally one day she came to me and said, 'Abba, I honestly love both of these men the same, and it's come to a point where I must decide. Now, you've got pretty good sense. You say which of them I should marry, and I'll up and marry him!'"

"And did you?" I gasped in my eagerness.

"I certainly did not," retorted my neighbor. "I just said, 'Now you look here. If you love both those men the same you don't love either of them. When you really love anybody you know it, and you feel absolutely different about him than you do about any one else in the world.'"

She paused a moment as if her own words had stirred many memories. My neighbor is a widow.

"What happened?" I suggested.

She came back to her story with a start. "Why, just what naturally would happen. The right man came along and the girl knew him without asking anybody's advice, and married him as soon as he asked her."

"And lived happily ever afterward," I questioned.

"And lived happily ever afterward," she assented.

So the story ends as all stories should.

And this is the poem:

Unless you can think when the song is done
That no other is soft in its rhythm
Unless you can feel when loved by one
That all men else go with him
Unless you can know when unpraised by his breath
That your beauty itself was proving
Unless you can say—for life—for death
Oh, fear to call it loving.

Unless you can muse in a crowd all day
On the absent face that fixed you
Unless you can love as the angels may
With the breath of Heaven betwixt you
Unless you can know that his faith is fast
Through beehiving and unbecoming
Unless you can die when the dream is past
Oh, never call it loving.

—Elizabeth Browning.

Do you suppose any one could feel that way about two people at once?

RUTH CAMERON.

FROM WOMAN'S POINT OF VIEW.

If we drank tea made like that of which the native of other countries partake freely our nerves would be none the worse for it. Japanese and Chinese are composed enough in manner, and the English have earned the title, "Phlegmatic." They all drink tea in preference to other liquids, even to water, and its virtues are due to the method of brewing the beverage.

In Oriental countries tea is usually taken without flavoring. The Russians like the flavor of a lemon, and the English use it, also, with sugar—they also use cream and sugar, but it is nothing like the liquid served at the American table under the name of tea. At our restaurants tea is not only unpalatable, but unwholesome, unless one has it made to order, and even then there is little surety that the water was freshly boiled.

It is not national to insist upon freshly boiled water in the making of tea. Real tea-lovers can detect the difference between it and stale water, however the novice may feel. A warm pot, freshly scalded, also adds something to the excellence of tea, and that should not be made of metal. Then the tea should be carefully measured and the process of infusion closely watched.

I have tasted tea that was made in the morning, cooled and re-heated at night, like heavy or brains beat in a woman.

Men have not yet decided whether they like beauty or brains beat in a woman.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NOTES
The last report from the treasurer of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society, so far as Washington is concerned, shows that $2,455.89 had been contributed out of a total appropriation of $11,500.

Last year during the same period there was contributed $7,321.13. These contributions, however, do not include the offering from Sunday schools and the Woman's Auxiliary.

Bishop Harding has accepted an invitation to be present at the bi-centennial services and festivities of the Canadian church. The bi-centennial is to be celebrated at Halifax, Nova Scotia, in September during the sessions of the Canadian Church Congress.

Rev. Enoch M. Thompson has acquired for the Chapel of the Nativity two more lots adjoining the church, with the idea of placing upon them eventually a rectory and a parish building. Mr. Thompson's work has grown rapidly.

Rev. Dr. G. W. Dame, now rector of Holy Innocents Church in the Diocese of Maryland, and at one time rector of St. Paul's parish, Prince George County, had a collision with a street car while riding his motorcycle.

The old parish of St. Paul's, Prince George County, which has been without a rector since the resignation of Rev. Francis Baser nearly a year ago, is now rejoicing in an occupied rectory once more, the Rev. Frederick Towers and family having recently taken possession.

Dr. A. Madeley Richardson, organist and choirmaster of St. Paul's, Baltimore, who went there a few months ago from Southwark Cathedral, England, has resigned, and his active duties terminated July 1.

Rev. H. P. Saumenig, formerly assistant at Trinity Church, Third and C streets, has been appointed rector of Trinity Church, Asheville, N. C.

The two assistants of St. Paul's have
